THEME

'I am for adjectives like beezzer, dreich, quare, and nouns like clart, drouth, gleed, mizzle, oxters, scoot-hole, smoor, and verbs like boke, fissle, greet, hunker, swither, and adverbs like furnenst. I am for non-standard English language as a legitimate and enriching form of critical and creative writing which does not take modalities of criticality as given, rather it tends to, and experiments with non-division between practice and theory, criticism and creativity.' — Maria Fusco

Dialecty is a new project conceived by writer Maria Fusco, and developed with The Common Guild, considering the embodiment and uses of vernacular forms of speaking and writing, exploring how dialect words, syntax and language question traditional orthodoxies of critical writing in creative form.

As part of the project, Fusco will commission six new solo-authored chapbooks drawn from open submission and invitation, which will be co-published by Book Works and The Common Guild throughout 2018. Artists and writers of all kinds are invited to apply. Lisa Robertson has been invited to write the first book in this series, and will write around the construction of vernacular voice amidst the abolishment of a lyric culture, stating 'I think the voice is the great Baroque pearl of this catastrophe that is the political human dump.'

OPEN SUBMISSION

The Common Guild together with Book Works are offering four new commissions to be selected from open submission, in addition to two invited commissions. These sole-authored publications will be aligned with the main themes of Fusco's project Dialecty: we are interested in proposals that are written in dialect, doggerel, intra-lingual and vernacular, or in proposals that reflect on these subject areas. All forms of writing – critical, cross-genre, experimental, new narrative etc. – are welcome.

SELECTION AND TIMEFRAME

Commissions will be selected by Maria Fusco, with Book Works and The Common Guild.

All selected commissions will be announced in early December, with projects underway in January/February, for publication between April – November 2018.

The books will be published at intervals from April 2018, and announced at our first launch event during Glasgow International Festival in April. Other events to launch the publications will be planned once work is selected and launch dates agreed, subject to contract.

EDITORIAL AND DESIGN

Book Works and The Common Guild will coordinate all aspects of editing and production, including decisions involving, design, budget, promotion and distribution of the book. Commissions will be edited by Maria Fusco and Book Works, as a co-operative process with the aim of producing projects sympathetic to the ambitions of the series. The editors would expect to work closely with the commissioned artist/author/collective on shaping the project and on any redrafts and revisions. You will be consulted at each stage of the process and expected to help take decisions about the way in which the work is presented. You will also be asked to work to deadlines and attend meetings as agreed, and must be willing to take some active part in the launch/promotion of the book. The books will be distributed separately and as a collection of works by Book Works in UK and rest of world.

HOW TO APPLY

The series of six books is designed to a standard format of 140 x 220mm, 16 pages, B&W contents with a colour cover: this means that the completed individual books will have a word-count of approximately 4,000 words.

To apply, please return the following before the deadline:

- a cover sheet with your name, address, email address and contact telephone number
- a proposal outline of no more than 500 words
- a sample of relevant work (4 pages hard copy)
- 4 images, hard copy print outs (if relevant to the proposal)
- a one-page CV
- a completed equal opportunities form (attached)

We are sorry but due to the volume of applications expected, we cannot return submissions.

Submissions must be hard copy. Hand-written submissions or electronic files will not be accepted. Late submissions will not be accepted.

ELIGIBILITY

Proposals are welcome from all sections of society, irrespective of nationality and residence, and including practitioners from different culturally diverse backgrounds.

FEEDBACK

Due to the volume of applications we will not be able to give any specific feedback on individual proposals unless short-listed. Book Works does, however, run free monthly artists' surgeries on all aspects of publishing and self-publishing.

FEE

A commissioning fee of £250 will be paid to selected artists/writers, who will also receive 50 copies of their publication. Book Works will be responsible for all production, publishing and marketing costs. The selected artists will be asked to sign an agreement with Book Works that will include a contract and detailed schedule for work.
